

$25 PRIZE FOR FAT MOTORMAN

Contest Open to All Motormen and Gripmen Within a 20-Mile Radius of the City Hall.

He drives a "hobnail."

He applies for a job.

He graduates to a trolley car and gains 200 pounds in four months.

The Evening World will give a prize of $25 in gold to the fattest motorman within a radius of twenty miles from City Hall Square.

This radius is fixed in order to limit the noble army of obese motormen not only in Greater New York, but in Jersey City, Newark, &c., as well.

The conditions of the contest, briefly, are as follows:

The contest will be open until Jan. 19. Both trolley and cable motormen are eligible.

Candidates are permitted to go into gaining, if they choose, in order to build up extra weight.

Each candidate must be weighed and the exact weight sent to The Evening World before Jan. 19.

He must be weighed in the presence of at least two witnesses and the correctness of the scales must be attested before a notary.

The result of his score against the scales should be addressed to the "Fat Motorman," Editor, New York World, P. O. Box 2351 New York City.

No weight will be considered unless accompanied by the deposition made before a notary.

Since the passing of the horse-car, the man whose only work now is to twist a wheel has waxed fat. In fact, he is one of the fattest men, as a rule, to be found in any industry.

Even as stars are of less or greater magnitude, so is there a like difference in the air of motormen.

The man who has outstripped all his fellows in this respect deserves some reward. The Evening World estimates his services to obesity at $25 in gold.

"Haven't you noticed that most motormen are fat?"

The question is by one of the brotherhood. He has turned the current on and on from his front platform post for two years, and has run from 150 pounds weight up to 245. He offers this substantial fact in support of his argument that the trolley car is a great anti-leanness institution.

It has to be admitted that this particular motorman is a Bostonian. He is W. H. Clark, of the South Boston line. He attributes his growth of avoirdupois to lack of exercise.

"We used," says he, "to have to take the horses out and shift them around to the other end when we turned around for the return trip, and often during a trip when we had to go back a ways. Then there was blanketing and attending to them. On a trolley car all you have to do is pick up your crank, walk through the car and sit down."

When these observations of Mr. Clark were repeated to a New York trolley man, who said he'd soon keep his name away from the public, this burly and overcoated citizen commented gruffly thus:

"Walk through a car and sit down, eh? Well, that may be Boston, but it ain't New York. Bring Mr. Clark up here, away from his subway and dead streets, and we'll take some of that extra fat off him."

"Say, do you think we put on flesh when we run a car down Sixth avenue on a good shopping day, a little behind schedule, with a dozen family parties?"

NEW TROLLEY LINE FORMED.

Baritan Traction Co. Gets Right of Way in New Jersey.

The report that the Baritan Traction Company has secured from the Freeholders of Middlesex County, N. J., the right to extend its lines to New Brunswick and Woodbridge is confirmed at the New York office. This will give it connections with the Consolidated Traction Company, of New Jersey, and enable the company to run cars from Perth Amboy to Jersey City by trolley.

The Baritan Traction Company is a consolidation of the Perth Amboy Railroad and the Baritan Trolley Company, and is owned by New York capitalists.

Leonard Lewisohn, the copper magnate, is president of the company. The vice-president is C. J. Wittenberg, and J. C. McCoy is secretary and treasurer.

TWO MEN KILLED BY CARS.

Escaping Steam Excludes View of Approaching Engine.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Jan. 7.—T. A. Bedford, of Wilmington, Del., assistant mining engineer for the Davis Coal and Coke Company, and Richard Lewis, of Clearfield, Pa., a roddman, were struck by a train at Thomas, W. Va., this morning and both killed. Steam escaping from a boiler excluded the view of the approaching train.

Ministers Change Faith.

ROCKFORD, Va., Jan. 7.—Rev. Robert H. Quaker, and Rev. E. B. Morrell, have joined the Christian Church.

D'ESSAUER, LOVER AND BOND SWINDLER, IS ONCE AGAIN IN POLICE TOILS.

Arrested in New Orleans. Where He Was Playing the Role of Companion and Guide.

George D'Essauer, ardent lover of Helen Bertram and others, gifted conversationalist and alleged seller of fictitious bonds to Chicago financiers, is at last in the hands of the Windy City authorities.

He was arrested in London several months ago, but the proceedings then fell through and D'Essauer disappeared from view. His reappearance took place under a new name in New Orleans just as the year 1900 was entering on its last three days of grace.

There arrived at the St. Charles Hotel in the Crescent City Mr. and Mrs. William Mackenzie, wealthy British tourists bound for Texas to purchase a ranch. With them, acting as companion and guide, was a man who registered as Dr. Clark.

Sharp eyes were presently on the doctor, among them those of "Bud" Demand, somewhat widely known as a sporting man. Then the police were suddenly tipped off as to the strange and impressive resemblance between Clark and the redoubtable D'Essauer. The latter gentleman had once stopped at the St. Charles. Servants of the hotel were found ready to identify him in the new corner. And so the doctor was arrested.

At first the prisoner denied himself. Then, in open court, he confessed that he was D'Essauer, but declared that everything had been arranged and that he was not wanted in Chicago. A telegram from Chief Kinley told a different story, thus: "He is wanted here badly."

Next came an officer with a requisition. The charge against him is that of issuing forged bonds to the amount of $200,000 on the Northwestern Gaslight and Coke Company.

The most interesting part of D'Essauer's career, to New York, is that covering his courtship of Helen Bertram, the sister of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

HELEN BERTRAM

GEO. D'ESSAUER

MRS. D'ESSAUER

with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer is said to have furnished Miss Bertram's costumes for "The Vice-roy" robes which astounded judges of fashion, the dresses being real silk velvet and rare stuffs from Eastern climes, embroidered with jewels and splendid button designs, sketched for the costumes by celebrated artists.

A picturesque story is related in connection with Miss Bertram's betrothal to D'Essauer. When Helen passed away, Miss Bertram had his body cremated and part of the ashes enclosed in a heart-shaped locket of gold-lined olive-wood, which she is said to have worn all the time next her heart.

When Miss Bertram exchanged vows with D'Essauer, she went through a very spectacular ceremony with the heart-shaped casket and Helen's ashes. Miss Bertram, D'Essauer and some members of the Bostonians went to the City House in San Francisco, and a delightful dinner, during which the celebrating twins renewed their vows of affection, and then Miss Bertram solemnly took off the chain which held Teddy's ashes and cast it far out into the sea.

D'Essauer